FOURSOME PLAY

A foursoma is really the most geniul form of golf. It is not to be thought that four ball matches are advocated. The Americans have dubbed these Scotch foursomes. Now playing four balls, the best of two against the best of two, is a wearisome process, and all four player must be pretty equa Moreover, unless in big Exhibition wise much occupied, there would be no place for them, as so much time necessarily taken up by even four good players going to work. It is of the grand old foursome that we are

In the fifties and sixties -when gelf was at its best-scoring was confined to two days in the year with the Royal and Ancient Golf Club at St Andrew's. Yet, strangely, the mere securing of the medal by strokes was never dwelt upon. It was a necessary evil, at the time the only means of of what his partner is best able to do bringing out the medal holder , (not the best player) for the two meetings. But

There were no invitation competitions, no handicaps (except a farce handicap on the medal day, which nobody but the winner with eighteen strokes remembered), no prizes in the shape of cups. It was the 'Medal Week, but big foursomes ruled every every day except the scoring Wednes-

The Honourable Company of Edinburgh Golfers possess re cords and medals for a century and a half. The Club, in the days o' suld lang syne would meet at dinner some six times during the season. After dinner, the match-book would be produced, and sundry foursome would be arranged and recorded therein, with any called up. These matches had to be played off before the next match dinner, when the results were officially declared, and the bets 'melted.' By this system of foursomes members got to know the play of all grades.

IN PRAISE OF FOURSOMES, When golf ceases to be a social game, when its rewards are specially in dividual, when medals take the place of honest pleasure, the game is doomed. A great philosopher-Lessing-said that he would prefer the pleasure of the continued and progressive search after truth itself. In a somewhat similar, way, comparing great things with small, to there is really, to the true golfer, more satisfaction, more cheering heartsomeness, in the social development of foursome play in its integrity, than in the 2401 individual glory for the time being of having secured a Championship. nuisance; one who accounts for his this take as if he were a good player out of his game is a great bother. But such partners are educative for a time. They teach that and self control. In order to win the match, you must make the best of a bad bargain. Nover scold; if your partner is timid, it will make him nervous; if obstinate, he will sulk; if choleric, he will say unpleasant things, or break his clubs.' You will weaken a poor player by unsparing flattery. Let him ask you for advice; never offer it.

TLEAL FARTNERSHIPS. But it is not long before a good player can select for his partner one who will be a joy to him in the game. The most pleasant foursomes are where a firstclass and a second-class player are on each side. There was no better partner to a strong player than the late Mr John Blackwood, editor of Maga. He know he was not a crack player; for, matches, where the Links are not other- though steady, he could never drive well with his twisted swing. But he had the rare power of holing putts regularly of six to eight feet. The moral effect of these putts was paralysing to his opponents, and his partner knew it was in him to do it at the time needed. He played as a real whist partner, not for his own glory, but to To bring back golf to its pristine win the match. His enthusiasm knew no bounds; the cares of 'Maga' never sat on his shoulders all the round. For enthusiasm there is nothing like match: And we would have lost it, but by the d-dest providence Blackwood holed the last pust! The beauty of genuine foursome play lies in this, that a man's individuality is absorbed in the common cause. He must a of take a liberty or risk anything without his partner's consent. He has to calculate where to drive his ball, not as if he had to play the second -the important shot of the hole, but thinking and what will suit him best. There must be mutual counsel and encouragement. Eyon the first-class player is not beyond receiving at times small meed In fact, it used to be almost the in- of praise for a good shot. But a bad player for a partner is semetimes very exacting; he considers that you ought never to make a mistake It is a matter of common observation - on paper difficult to account forthat a good, steady, second-chies player and a first-class player will-hole the round in nearly as few strokes as the first-class player can do, playing his owns ball. The inferior golfer, when he has confidence in his partner, will always play above his game. He is astonished at it; yet it is a fact. And nothing will improve his general play so much as a series of such foursomes. He is in the best of moods, and he will not cease. talking over the match; and he goes at it with a birr next match.

A FAHOUS FOURSOME. One famous match of this kind may be here mentioned, as a good case in point. Mr Tom Peter, a second class player, and the great golfer, Allan Robertson, played against Mr O'Brien Peter, and the best general representative of the game all over yet seen. Tom Morris. This foursome was played on St. Andrew's Links in the 'fifties,' more frequently than any other foursome before or since. On one occasion they mild bets that excitement and interest played for two consecutive days five rounds each day; and the match ended in a draw. When they finished, Allan said he had never had sion belly fou o' gowf a' his days. So enthusiastic were they that they would play on at the short holes, with lanterns set at the holes to guide the putt [] The late Mr. James Balfour Melville (father of the ex-Amateur Champion) recorded a most exciting foursome played at St. Andrew's in 1803, between Mr. George Condie and Major Boothby sgainst Mr. Thomas Hodge and himself. All were medal holders, and were at the top of their game. They played for two days three rounds the first day and three and a half the second, or 113 holes in all, and at the end of the 112th they were all even ! But Condie and Boothy gained the last hole. A match like that lives in one's memory so long as golf can be thought of. A foursome that created a good dealof interest at the time arose from a challenge which appeared in the Field newspaper, from the Mouldsworths, father and son, to play any other father and son in the country, the match to be three rounds of St. Andrew's Links. Mr. Balfour-Melville and his son accepted the challenge. The mutch was played in 1874, in presence of a large gallery; and the Balfours and the satisfaction of

was played in 1849, between Allan Robortson and Tom Morris against the brothers Willie and Jamie Dunn, for £400. The match was 36 holes on each of the greens of St. Andrew's, Musselburgh, and North Berwick. The Dunnies' thrashed the St. Andrews men at Musselburgh, but got beaten at St. Andrews. It would be impossible to find in the whole annals of golf a more perfect illustration of the advantages of pluck and perseverance than in the deciding match at North Berwick. The early part of the match went greatly in favour of the Dunns, whose play was magnificent. At length they got four up and eight to play. But how fickle is the game! Allan and Tom recovered, and by a magnificent spurt, gained the first hole then the second, halved the third, gained the fourth, halved the fifth, and gained the sixth, thus making the poll all even, and two to play. These two holes Allan and Tom won, thus obtaining the glorious match. The more one thinks of the fine old matches, the more he is impressed with the much more social, kindly, and humour-inspiring power that there is in a foursome than in a single. As for mere scoring, we would as soon see a man playing alone with his scoring card, occasionally taking a second chance when a short putt is missed. Let us have more of stirring foursomes to counteract the evils which are dragging down the enthusiasm, the brightness, and the humanity of the best of games!

Another 23-Knot Crniser.

The Admiralty have ordered a new armoured cruiser to be laid down at Pembroke Dock. The ship will be one of a class of six, for the commencement of which provision was made in the naval shipbuilding programme for the current financial year. These vessels were designed as an improvement on the Monmouth class of cruisors, which they will resemble in their principal structural features. The Monmouth ships are 449 feet long. The new vessel will be longer. She will also differ. somewhat in armament, having a single 7 5-inch gun in each berbette.

Population of London and New York.

In 1891, the population of London was 4,423,220, and in 1901 it has increased to 4,803,342, an increase of 370,122 in ten years. In the year 1890, the population of of what is now Greater New York was 2,492,591, and by the year 1900 it has increased to 3,437,202, an increase during the decade of 944,611. Fifteen years ago London was growing at the rate of 50,000 s year, whereas the increase of the past decade averages slightly over 37,000 per year. As against this (eays Trection and Transmission), a comparison of the tensus of the last two decades in America shows that in 1880 to 2,492,591 ir 1890, or 31 per 1890 to 1900 was at the rate of 37 to per cent. The costumes of the members of the mission, apart from that of the young Prince, may strike the casual observer as somewhat peculiar: in fact, they are the ancient State costume, which is derived from a Tartar and not a Chinese source. Every English child who receives an ordinary education learns, or has learnt, that the present Imperial Family of China is of foreign origin, and that the Emperor and tive policy of quiet progress. Hongkong is by no means a pleasant place of residence, nor a very salubrious one; but this latter failing might be greatly modified, if the wealthy inhabitants of the city would spend a certain amount of money in cleansing the streets making sanitary arrangements, and preventing, as they easily could, the overcrowding of the poorer quarters. Instead of this, when, as at present, an epidomic of plague visits the town, they content themselves with upbrai ding the unfortunate Governor, whoever he, may be, and refusing, at the same time to give him any assistance in rendering the place habitable and healthy. Most of the richer portion of the community, and all the better class of Europeans, live in the surrounding country : i.e., the suburbs the city; and are, therefore, personally comparatively unaffected by the extreme unhealthiness which decimates the poorer part of the population. Probably, the chie cause of this outbreak of the plague, and certainly the reason of its continuity, has been the existence of the millions of rats which infest Hong-Kong. If drastic mensures were employed to destroy, or, at amyrate, greatly to decrease this vernin, enormous benefit would accrue; but this is no easy matter, and would require the hearty co-operation of the inhabitants, The climate of the island is, nearly the whole year round, of the dampest, warmest, and most depressing character. Someone who had long lived there told ms :

We drip from merning to night, both from the trees outside the house, in our own persons; one lives in state of perpetual perapiration, and any body who has the slightest respect for physical comfort or cleanliness must change his clothes-we only wear white linen garments-two or three times a day. There are some hills near to which if you repair, you may got a breach of fresh siz and a cooler climate; but of course, for all engaged in business avocations—and hardly anyone exists in Hongkong who is not in which any European would choose as a gentlemen, on behalf of my colleagues, the residence—visits to the hills are confined to staff and myself, for your vote of thanks. #### The Hongkong Government's Indian Prop.

We have referred in our editorial colanus to an article in The Times of India which H. E. Sir Henry Blake reproduces Ludy Blake, his devoted companion, in a despatch to Mr Chamberlain. The following are the concluding paragraphs, which may be new to some of our readers :-

The petitioners have artlessly placed hofore Mr Chamberlain an assertion made by Dr J. A. RESIGNATION OF REV. R. F.

The Notes of St. John's Cathedral for the current month contains the following letter from the Rev. R. F. Cobbeld, Chaplain, to the Church Body :-Hongkong, 27th November, 1901.

CATHEDRAL. My Lord and Gentlemen, -I have the honour of acquainting you with the fact that I have this day returned from my holiday, having been absent nine months and two weeks, and that I am propared now to take over from Mr Johnson the responsibilities of my position.

It is, however, within your knowledge. that on the 3rd of October last I cabled from England to the Bishop of Victoria that I intended on my return to Hongkong to ask permission to resign the post of Chaplain of Saint John's Cathedral which I have held during the past nine years and

Agreeably with that message, -I, having to-day arrived, now beg to place in your hands my resignation ; and to state that should like it to take effect on the Sist of March next, or as soon as a new appointment can be made before that date. . It may not be considered strictly accurate to use the term ' resignation ' since my last agreement expired in 1898, and was never formally renewed. Still, as it seems to have been taxitly understood on both sides that the appointment held good for a longer period, the word practically expresses my

My reason for now asking you to appoint a new Chaplain in my stead is mainly of a private nature and I need not particularise it in detail; but chiefly it is that I may, by residence in England, fulfil what I consider a duty to my relations there; and, that this may be so, I am promised the offer of an appointment at home if I am there to accept it when a vacancy occurs.

I, therefore, wish to return to England as soon as possible; and I renture to hope that you will make an appointment here at an early date. If it should be before the 31st of March I should relinquish my post as soon as such appointment be made ; and in that event I shall be elad, if it be thought necessary in order to defray the cost of-a new Chaplain's passage from England, to repay the amount which will have been, according to promise, paid to me out of the Cathedral Fund for my recent passage to

Although the prospect of residence in Eugland is, naturally, a pleasing one, it sorry to sever my connection with the work Glasgow Exhibition, by Mr Lewis F. Day the Church have, which has been as is as attractive as heretofore. It is charm a tappiness to me as it has been an honour to be called to do it. There have perly appreciate the consistent kindness which the Church Body has hitherto always

With the earnest wish that you may guided by the Spirit of Wisdom in the exercise of your responsibility to our fellowworshippers here, and select the right man -a man full of zeal and power. I am, my Lord and Gentlemen, Your obedient Ser-

ROWLAND F. COBBOLD.
